History of the Poem. The year 1865 found John Henry Newman, the author of The Dream of Gerontius, an old man, living with his brethren in quiet seclusion in the Oratory at Birmingham. He was now close upon his sixty-fourth birthday, and naturally, as the years advanced, began to look forward with greater frequency to his approaching end. That supreme moment in every man's life when the soul goes out to meet its Judge, had been to him at all times as if a present reality; and now that the time was very near, as he thought, when he should pass from shadows and images to the truth, that moment became more than ever the subject of his thoughts and meditations.
